

SOCIOLOGY

SOCIAL SERVICES (A.B.)

The Department of Sociology offers a program of study that emphasizes the interactive perspective on family, community, social problems and social services. In order to provide a focused course of study within this emphasis, the department offers a semi-structured program of courses and practical experience in the field of social welfare, the family, psychology and stratification. The nucleus of the program includes three courses:

- I. The Family - the history of cross-cultural perspectives of family life with attention to power relations within and beyond the family;
- II. Social Stratification - the systems of social ranking, power, prestige, culture, styles of life, various social classes and social mobility; and
- III. Social Welfare - sociological analysis of the evolution and current organization of welfare functions in modern societies.

This program provides a strong liberal arts education and adequately prepares students to work in the “diverse” social environment of the early 21st century. Twelve units within the area of race and ethnicity (including both lower and upper division) are required to complete the program. Students round out this program with courses chosen from areas of social issues, social interaction, gender, organizational behavior and methodology.
